... Fortsetzung: Beitrag eines Frosch-Ausflugs 2016 von John Wetstone

► was before driving up the Ettal Berg to the famous Plansee Straße re-opened road which been closed since last March. Just in time for us, it was re-opened only the day before, weren't we lucky!

Hmm, well so much for luck for waiting around the first curves was a dark cloud and it did rain some, not too heavily, so we all just drove a little faster. Finally, I could see the end of the shower and we stopped next to the glacier lake of Plansee.

We all enjoyed the first leg of our tour and the light rain which had stopped. I followed the golden rule and put my roof back on: This of course prevented any further rain for the rest of the day.

We continue on to my old friends the Hermann's Alpenhotel Ernberg located in Breitenwang, arriving a little early in the warm sun. After our fantastic lunch we were all ready to roll.

We were in for a surprise because since I had written the road book, they had changed the roads in and around Reutte, which even I was not aware of at the time. But I was the only one to notice the changes for no one even need to look at my road book since we were playing follow the leader.

We zoomed through the pass road towards Fuessen having green lights all the way to the B17. Here another road had been closed for construction since last March. This was a very special construction site for crossing frogs – that's right, real frogs! – so that they could pass under the road not over it; this environmental gem not only cost a small fortune but tied up the area for more than two months.

Neuschwanstein!

Happy and dry enjoying desert specialty of the house.

We drove on to Steingaden one of my favorite monasteries in the area, for little local culture pause.

After our visit to one of the oldest monasteries in Bayern we were ready for our long ride to Schloss Seefeld. The drive took us over Andechs Monastery's Brewery where we only could smell the beer while trying not to run over the drunks who trying to cross the road who did not know what make of our cars. Through rolling hills of Upper Bavaria we went on to Schloss Seefeld our last stop before returning to Munich.

At Schloss Seefeld, we were permitted to drive in the courtyard of the castle which was a real privilege. We enjoyed watching the children admiring our cars and our coffee until the skies told us it was time to go home.

And so our small group of dedicated, stalwart drivers concluded this year's tour. Saturday evening, the rains returned drenching the area yet again but we all got home dry and safe. All in all, a great day!
